School is about to start, but Bay Area teachers’ unions and districts still can’t agree on key details for online learning Some teachers did extensive online teaching while others did none or held office hours only. “They need that interaction, they need that teaching. District officials want teachers to report to schools to do distance learning.

These businesses are hiring But some industries - everything from grocery stores to security firms to online learning, e-commerce and shipping businesses - are hiring. Juni Learning: The San Francisco educational technology startup is

'There’s no way we can go back to what we were before': The Bay Area is learning to live with the coronavirus I’ve been teaching infectious diseases to graduate students for 40 years, and about pandemics and how they were certainly going to happen. The coronavirus, for how quickly and efficiently it's traveled

'We have to do better': Bay Area districts scramble to improve distance learning after spring’s chaotic rollout "No one really wants to do remote learning," It really requires a different approach to learning," Kelly said. Noah said he thinks online teaching will be less chaotic when school starts next month,
